Childhood as 'self-education' and as 'disciplined freedom': Applying the capability approach to children, education and democracy
Shanti George, independent researcher

Continuing the monthly seminar’s emphasis on children as social actors and as subjects, this presentation will argue that children are not too young to be full citizens participating in democracies, in this case democracy within the home -- ‘the personal is political,’ when it comes to relationships between generations just as with relationships between the genders. Neither are young children too immature to have social science analysis extended to them, as the presentation will attempt to demonstrate by applying concepts of 'self education' and 'disciplined freedom' (essential to democracy) developed by Donald Schön in the context of 'reflective practitioners.' The presentation thereby disagrees with voices within the capability approach which assert that 'when dealing with children, it is the freedom that they will have in future rather than the present that should be considered' (Saito 2003). The presentation is intended to apply universally, questioning distinctions usually made between the so called Global South and Global North.

The Anthropology of Children Working Group (based at VU University, Amsterdam) brings together academics and practitioners engaged in research and work with children. Through monthly seminars, the Working Group promotes child-oriented theory, methodology, and research ethics. Besides, it serves as a platform for (interdisciplinary) academic research and it enhances dialogue with practitioners through joint research projects, publications and conferences.
